

We are responding to the proposal that the FCC is considering which could diminish Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. My husband owns his own business and is the sole employee of the business. Before the above law was passed he was interrupted numerous times a day by telemarketing calls. In addition to just being a nuisance, these calls shortened his work time as well as keeping his line busy so customers could not get through. We would be greatly disturbed if this law were to be weakened. He would get as many as 10 calls a day previously and now receives 1 or 2 a month. His productivity is up and his general mood much improved. Please do not dilute this important law.
